Dear Alex D'Aquila,

I would like to express my interest in holding a position at Epocrates as a Software Developer Intern for the summer of 2014. I first heard about Epocrates through a career fair held at my school on January 29th, and have since become very interested in the company. I can definitely be in Berkeley throughout the entire summer, and believe that I am very qualified and capable of meeting and exceeding the expectations of this internship.

My education at UC Berkeley has prepared me extensively for the role as a software developer. Through the computer science program, I have taken two year's worth of extremely rigorous classes that have given me expertise in writing code in both Java and Python. Additionally, the mathematics program has not only provided for me a depth of mathematical knowledge, but also the ability to think very critically and logically.

Since I started programming, it has been a goal of mine to incorporate programming with another of my interests: biology. For most of my life I wanted to be a doctor, and although that has changed, my desire to get into the medical field has not. I am very passionate about helping others, particularly by improving their health, and want to create applications and programs that achieve this end. I will bring a lot of passion and energy to the Epocrates team because of this.

Upon reading about Athenahealth and Epocrates, I think I can fit in and add considerably to the office culture. Through my considerable project work in class that I did with my classmates and friends, I have learned that I work remarkably well with others. I can find the balance between maintaining a positive attitude through having fun and getting a great deal of work done. I am very outgoing and personable, and succeeded in applying these traits to my position as social chair of my fraternity. I am passionate about getting friends together and have continued to do so even after my term as social chair has ended.

I look forward to meeting more people and learning more about Epocrates. I hope that I will be able to contribute to the company. Thank you for all your time and your consideration.

Sincerely,

Christopher Dunn
